The following transfers were probably effected in connection with the assembly of air units in the battle area; Ground attack regiments from Brandenburg-Briest and Brandenburg-Arado, and probably one fighter regiment from Grossenhain to Trurt-Findersleten eighted; Ground attack regiment from Alt-Loennewitz to Schkeuditz near Leipzig and elements of this regiment possibly to Merseburg; Possibly the ground attack regiment from Finsterwalde to Altenburg airfield, as ground attack regiment from Finsterwalde to Altenburg airfield, as ground attack aircraft were observed at this field. Since the number of aircraft and air activity at Melzow, Brand and Grossenhain airfields decreased considerably during the period of the maneuvers, it is assumed that the fighter regiments from these airfields were transferred to other dirfields for the maneuver. The aircraft were probably transferred to Erfurt-Bindersleben, Altenburg and Koethen airfields as an increased number of aircraft was observed at these fields.

The fact that the units assembled in the Koethen-Francis-Altenburg area as well as in the Erfurt-Findersleten area may indicate that the air force units were organized into an eastern group and a western group during the maneuvers while the attacking army units probably moved from the Ilm Piver south of Weimar toward the west into the area around Armstadt.
